Organisations and communication

Position of the course

The course unit 'Organisations and communication' (A40C) introduces various core aspects of corporate communication. To this end, the internal and external communication of organisations is placed in a cohesive framework and linked to the organisational structure of organisations. The role of multilingualism and intercultural communication is also brought up in this connection.

(Approved)

Contents

The course unit 'Organisations and Communication' (A40C) offers an overview of various forms of communication: internal communication, corporate communication and marketing communication. Aspects that are covered include: identity and image, building a strong brand, internal communication in the event of changes, developing a communication plan and crisis communication. Much time is set aside for drawing up a communication plan. Alongside a theoretical survey of the field of study, an introduction to key concepts and models, theory is also tried out in practice. This is done by (i) cases, that pertain to the lesson content and (ii) guest lecturers that flesh out the different aspects of communication in organisations.

Initial competences

The general competences that may be expected from an academic bachelor, preferably in a course-related discipline.

Final competences
