Teaching languages

Dutch

Keywords

Latin, phonology, morphology, Indo-European, Italic languages, language change

Position of the course

This course gives an overview of the development from Proto-Indo-European over proto-Italic to pre-literary Latin. The phonology and morphology of classical Latin are situated within a historical background, stressing the evolution of sounds and forms. This theoretical background is essential for the study of Latin at the Gent University, where a diachronic overview is presented of the use of Latin from preclassical to medieval times.

Contents

The course consists of four main sections: (1) general introduction on Proto-Indo-European and the main linguistic families descending from it; (2) Proto-Italic; the Latino-Faliscan and the Sabellic group: main similarities and diversities; (3) Characteristics of archaic Latin and discussion of selected epigraphic texts; discussion of the important Lex XII tabularum; (4) exercises on classical Latin phonology, morphology and syntax.

Initial competences

Good command of classical Latin.

Final competences

- 1 To understand and apply phonological technical signs.
- 2 To understand the connections between Indo-European, Proto-Italic and Latin.
- 3 To explain what we mean by "Indo-European", "Proto-Italic" and "Italic".
- 4 To indicate and explain the main characteristics of the Sabellic languages.
- 5 To indicate and explain the main characteristics of Faliscan.
- 6 To interpret and comment selected texts from Sabellic and Faliscan.
- 7 To describe and comment the main phonological features of archaic Latin as compared to classical Latin.

8 To read, translate and comment the earliest Latin texts.

9 To be able to convert arcaic Latin texts en texts from the Oscan and Faliscan area into classical Latin.
