Spanish-America, literature, cultural history, literary analysis

Position of the course

This course builds on the "Spanish and Spanish-American Civilization" course and aims at providing students with insights in a number of key concepts and texts in Spanish-American literature since colonisation to the present. The emphasis is on the historical-ideological functioning of literature and on pointing out certain constants between past and present, but the course also considers interesting shifts in the way Spanish-America is imagined and imagines itself.

Exchange students can follow this course. No knowledge of Dutch is required.

Contents

This course covers major trends, genres and concepts of Spanish-American literature from the Spanish conquest in the 16th century to the present. While taking into account colonial literature and the Independence (19th century), connections are being established with modern and contemporary literature.

The structure is divided into two parts. Part 1 focuses on the dominant discourses of power as introduced by Spanish colonisation in Latin America. Part 2 focuses on the growing importance of the emancipation processes and countervoices that undermine these dominant discourses. The emphasis is on the protest of indigenous cultures against discrimination and the consequences of Western "civilisation" (e.g. extractivism) and on breaking racial and gender stereotypes.

The programme is built upon capita selecta that can change annually.

The lectures will be accompanied by sessions during which reading and analytical skills are practiced and the assignment is prepared. Active participation in these sessions mandatory.

Initial competences

- To have completed the courses in Spanish language proficiency or have gained some of the required competencies in a different way (level B1).
- To have completed the course in Spanish and Spanish-American culture and civilization or have gained some of the acquired competencies in a different way.

Final competences

- 1 To be able to situate a number of important topics and issues in Spanish-American literature and culture in their diachronic evolution (from colonial times to the present day) and place them in their sociopolitical and cultural context.
- 2 To be able to interrelate the literary developments with the establishment of a proper Spanish-American identity.
- 3 To be able to explain the origins, creation and evolution of the most prominent literary genres in Spanish-America.
- 4 To be able to interrelate the works studied (texts and other cultural products) with each other by discussing thematic and formal similarities and/or differences.
- 5 To be able to write a paper in advanced Spanish on a research question related to one of the topics covered in the course.
- 6 To be able to write a solid text analysis and to report on it in advanced oral and written Spanish.
