Teaching languages

English

Keywords

The oldest documented Germanic language

Position of the course

A first introduction to Gothic

Contents

After an introduction into the (cultural-)historical background, the course focuses on the Gothic language and the linguistic analysis thereof. The Gothic texts, among which the famous Bible translation by Ulfila, are the oldest extant texts in any Germanic language. Gothic is therefore of eminent importance for the study of other older Germanic languages.

Initial competences

To have completed the Bachelorprogramme Linguistics & Literature (two languages), or to have acquired the respective competences by other means. Acquaintance with (basic) linguistic terminology is expected.

Important: Gothic is a dead language from late Antiquity, comparable to Latin or Greek. Previous knowledge of a classical language is not required, but may be helpful in case of absence of previous knowledge of (historical stages of) a Germanic language (English, Dutch, German, Scandinavian languages) or historical stages of another Indoeuropean language.

Final competences

- 1 Overview over the synchronic and historical grammar of Gothic
- 2 To describe the history of the language and the text types of Gothic
- 3 To place the linguistic features of Gothic within the context of the other Germanic (and Indoeuropean) languages
- 4 Basic reading competency for understanding also texts not discussed during the course concerning their historical context and transmission
