Teaching languages

English

Keywords

English, linguistics, phonology, phonetics, segmental, suprasegmental

Position of the course

This course teaches students to describe and transcribe a spoken utterance in English in a theoretical and descriptive phonological framework and makes them familiar with the basic principles of current phonological theories, contrastive phonology and phonological first and second language acquisition.

Note for exchange students: Exchange students wishing to take 'English Linguistics II: Phonology' should be aware that this course partly builds on expertise gained in English Linguistics I and that a background in linguistics is hence expected.

Contents

This course deals with various aspects of the phonological description of the English language, in particular Received Pronunciation (Standard British English). Segmental aspects (isolated sounds, stress in individual words, allophonic variation) as well as suprasegmental aspects (prosody incl. intonation, stress in a tone unit and phenomena such as sound deletion, sound contraction, etc.) are taken into consideration.

Initial competences

Final competences

1 describe and classify the vowels and consonants of English (RP)

- 2 describe in detail the movements of the speech organs and the airstream mechanism in the production of English sounds
- 3 master the key concepts of the phonetics and phonology of English, such as phonemes versus allophones, syllable structure, phenomena of connected speech, stress and intonation, etc.
- 4 phonemically transcribe English speech, with attention to aspects of connected speech, such as assimilations, elisions, reductions
- 5 explain the basic principles of a number of phonological theories (traditional generative phonology, Optimality Theory)
- 6 conduct a contrastive phonological analysis by comparing the English phonological system to the Dutch one
- 7 have insight into the principles in phonological first and second language acquisition
- 8 demonstrate the relation between phonology and orthography in English
