Keywords

Language variation, spoken French, Belgian French, French outside Europe, sociolinguistics

Position of the course

This course aims to broaden the knowledge of French Linguistics by considering the phenomenon of "variation" from different perspectives.

Contents

Three modules are proposed:

1. Description of the specificity of spoken French (and its registers) at the phonetic, morphological, lexical and, especially, syntactic level (prof. P. Lauwers)
2. Description of the linguistic situation of French in Belgium (prof. P.Lauwers).
3. Description of the linguistic situation of French outside Europe (Prof. P. Hadermann).

Initial competences

This course requires a solid insight in the functioning of linguistic systems - esp. morphology and morphosyntax. As such it builds on "French Linguistics I" and, to a lesser extent, "French Linguistics IV". Language proficiency level: C1.

Final competences

- 1 students have acquired insight in the various dimensions of language variation (with respect to the norm)
- 2 students have a sound factual knowledge of some important variants of contemporary French (esp. spoken French, Belgian French, French spoken in Africa)
- 3 students have a clear insight in the (sociolinguistic and historical) background of the variants of French, within the global situation of multilingualism
- 4 students understand that French is not a monolithic bloc but, instead, that there is more and more room for a polycentric vision within the broader framework of the "Francophonie"
- 5 students have the means to compare / to align their own variant with the other possible variants of French
- 6 students are able to synthesize a serious amount of information (taken from sources that are offered by the courseholders) and to present it to a group in an interactive way (development of teaching skills) in academic French (C1).
- 7 students improve their French language proficiency by studying vocabulary related to colloquial French and Belgian French in a contrastive fashion.
