Keywords

French literature, 21st century, contemporary literature, ecology, text analysis, ethics and aesthetics

Position of the course

This advanced course focuses on texts (close reading of French literary texts) and aims an advanced approach of contemporary French fiction (21st century) in which nature plays an important part. The course aims to give insight in a field of French literature that is on the interface between fiction and reality, aesthetics and ethics.

Contents

The central question that this course tries to answer is how contemporary French writers fictionalize ecological themes. Starting from a close reading and contextual analysis of a selection of novels in which nature takes an important place, we examine the representation of the relationship between humans and nature. The approach pays attention to history, ethics and aesthetics, is problematical and places the subject in a global context.

This course counts on an active participation of the students who are expected to reflect critically on ecological contemporary literature. This involves a personal reading of a specific novel.

Initial competences

An excellent command of the French language. It is important to speak fluently French in order to participate in the discussions. The course links up with the methodological issues and literary history presented in Ba3.

Final competences

- 1 Show advanced knowledge of key issues in French literature explored in the course.
- 2 Demonstrate a critical approach to scientific analyses.
- 3 Display the ability to analyze scientifically French-speaking literary texts in French.
- 4 Gain insight into the core issues in French literature discussed in the course.
- 5 Be able to report on and present in writing and orally one's own reading and research in French (proficiency level C1).
- 6 Show critical, analytical and synthetic thinking as regards the issues covered in the course.
- 7 Elucidate aesthetic, ethical and social aspects of the issues debated in the course.
