Position of the course

This course helps students to acquire knowledge, insight and intellectual and ethical competencies concerning the major global restructuring of sexualities and its impact and effects. The course aims at sharpening the research skills of the students in order for them to be able to better understand and gauge the structural, existential and ethical impact of 'global sexualities.'

Contents

The first part of the course consists of a general introduction to the subject of globalization and sexuality. We'll be looking at, e.g., how different approaches to globalization and types of globalisation theories tend to single out different 'global sexualities' and how these are evaluated accordingly. We also will be looking at some of the pioneering texts that have defined the field of 'global sexualities studies.'

During the second part of the course we'll be looking in greater detail at some of the core issues related to global sexualities, like, e.g., global commercialization of sexuality and global migration (trafficking, sex work, sex tourism, ...), the formulation of and global activism related to sexual and reproductive rights and sexual health (and disease), the rise of global sexual identities and the impact of, e.g., the internet and the media on 'global sexual subcultures,' etc. In the third part, the students play an active role by writing, debating and presenting on these and other themes of their own choice.

Initial competences

No course-specific initial academic competencies are required.

Final competences

- 1 Having insight into the development of human sexuality under the influence of globalisation.
- 2 Having insight in the relations between perspectives on globalisation, globalization theories and the identification and evaluation of 'global sexualities.'
- 3 Having knowledge of the relation between global commercialization of sexualities, global migration and sexuality (e.g.trafficking, sex work and sex tourism).
- 4 Having knowledge of the emergence of the notions of and activism related to sexual and reproductive rights, sexual health (and disease).
- 5 Having knowledge of the emergence of 'global sexual identities' and their impact.
- 6 Being able to set up and communicate about an explorative research project concerning the relation between sexuality and globalisation
