Position of the course

This advanced course aims to acquaint the students with the historical dimension of contemporary globalisation, which is defined as the increasing global integration within which structurally unequal power relations have come into being. We will especially undertake a critical analysis of the concept of 'modernity' and 'modernization'. The subject of this course follows up from the learning outcomes obtained through the course 'World History'.

Contents

This course offers a world historical perspective on the growing integration of the world. Throughout the course, a selection of global processes are defined, confirmed and/or contested as agents of continuity and change on a global level. Different angles (macro- & micro-historical, theoretical and empirical) will be adopted. The concept of modernity and the process of modernization is being reviewed diachronically and synchronically. This long-term approach enables to explain the contingency of the 'rise of the west', and the role of colonization in the process of modernization, making use of different case studies and a comparative approach of technological, economic and institutional factors.

Initial competences

- To have successfully completed the course 'Introduction to world history' or to have acquired the necessary skills by other means.

Final competences

- 1 Having a substantial historical knowledge of the processes of globalisation and on the making of world economies and world-systems from the Middle Ages to the contemporary period.
- 2 Being able to situate current societal processes within this historical context.
- 3 Autonomously identifying elements of modernization and modernization theory in historical discourses.
- 4 Critically evaluating claims for the historic reality and robustness of these dimensions.
- 5 Comparing interpretations of a single process of globalisation in their respective strengths, weaknesses, and differences.
