Linguistics and literature, Indo-European languages, Germanic languages, Romance languages, Classical languages, language history, typology

Position of the course

This course offers an overview of the 9 languages of the programme in Linguistics and Literature. It pays attention to their history, mutual contacts and the role of literature in their development.

Contents

Starting from an overview of the Indo-European language family the trajectories of the Classical, Romance and Germanic languages will be examined from the earliest times up to now. Attention will be paid to their origin, typology and relationship(s). In the historical line of the course essential themes will be highlighted such as the influence of Latin, the textual tradition of the oldest writings, processes of standardisation, language contact and linguistic change. The relationship between language and literature is a constant focus. The course thus wishes to act as a general introduction to the programme in Linguistics and Literature.
