Position of the course

This advanced course is part of a series Domain-specific practice courses, which aims at teaching students the techniques and methods of describing and illustrating archaeological material finds, building on the course Introduction to materials. This course will focus on typology and technology of different categories of artefacts, both of local and imported nature, from the Provincial-Roman period.

Contents

Evolution of ceramics (typology and technology) during Roman times in the Northern provinces of the empire. Other material groups (glass, stone tools, CBM and other building materials, ...) will also be discussed.

Initial competences

- To have successfully completed the course Introduction to Materials or have acquired the intended competences in another way
- To have successfully completed (or to follow simultaneously) the course Archaeology of the Provincial-Roman period.

Final competences

- 1 To be able to analyse and recognise Gallo-Roman artefacts
- 2 To have basic knowledge of the diversity of archaeological finds of the Provincial-Roman period, based on personal experience with materials.
- 3 To be able to determine Roman material globally, on the basis of type and form.
- 4 To be able to use the study of ceramics as a way to reconstruct chronological and socio-economic processes
- 5 To be able to evaluate the research of earthenware and situate it in the right context.
- 6 To be able to use the results of material study to add to the general site interpretation based on specific casestudies.
- 7 To be able to reflect critically of the relations between groups of finds and their contexts
