Position of the course

This introductory course offers the students a general historical framework of the history of the Ancient Near East (from the Neolithic revolution to the Persian empire). They become acquainted with the archaeological and epigraphic sources and learn to approach them critically, and gain insight in important historical processes as well as in the interaction with the ancient environment.

Contents

An overview of the history of the Ancient Near East is offered by lectures in which (1) the general periodization, the main events and their dynamics are treated based on the the handbook A History of the Ancient Near East ca. 3000-323 BC by M. Van De Mierop (3rd edition, Wiley-Blackwell, 2016), and (2) specific topics of Ancient Near Eastern history are explored in depth through case-studies illustrated by archaeological and/or epigraphic sources and elaborated in thematic dossiers with supplementary literature.

Initial competences

passive knowledge of English, French and German (to be able to consult specialist literature)

Final competences

- 1 To be able to situate chronologically the different periods of the history of the Ancient Near East.
- 2 To be acquainted with the main characteristics and developments of each period of the history of the Ancient Near East.
- 3 To have insight into the general historical processes of the history of the Ancient Near East.
- 4 To be familiar with the geography of the Ancient Near East, to be able to situate the main geographical features on a map and to explain the interaction of the geographical area with human history.
- 5 To be able to interpret the archaeological and epigraphic sources discussed in class and their significance for the history of the Ancient Near East.
