Keywords

Philosophical primary sources from Antiquity, Middle Ages and Renaissance, textual analysis, interpretation

Position of the course

This basic course will help students become acquainted with the problems of interpreting philosophical texts from Antiquity, the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, (read in translation); students will be confronted with a number of different modern interpretations of ancient, medieval and renaissance texts.

Contents

To read and comment a number of thematically linked philosophical texts (in translation) from ancient, medieval and renaissance philosophers, together with a number of modern interpretations.

Initial competences

Preferably: To have successfully completed the courses History of ancient philosophy and History of mediaeval philosophy or to have acquired the necessary skills by other means.

Final competences

- 1 To be able to read and interpret philosophical works written by ancient, medieval and renaissance authors, taking into account the historical context they were written in as well as the philosophical tradition they belong to.
- 2 To be able to analyse and summarise the argumentation of the texts discussed.
- 3 To be able to trace the theme of the anthology diachronically over several works.
- 4 To be able to discuss modern interpretations critically.
- 5 To be able to express personal philosophical reflections on the discussed texts.
- 6 To learn to read ancient philosophical texts independently, as well as recent scientific literature, to learn to write a paper about these texts, and to learn to give an oral presentation.

Teaching methods

Seminar, Independent work

Extra information on the teaching methods

Seminar: critical and interactive analysis of the texts; the students will be asked to prepare sections of the texts in advance, to ask questions and to introduce problems for discussions.

Learning materials and price

A corpus of ancient and medieval philosophical texts (excerpts) in translation and a corpus of secondary texts: articles and chapters from recent books regarding the primary texts and the central theme, available for free on Ufora.

The theme this year will be Heraclitus through the ages. We will read the fragments of Heraclitus and study the way later philosophers as Plato and Aristotle, the Stoics e.a. dealt with the philosophy of Heraclitus in their own work. We will also read modern philosophers who were very influential for the modern historiography of ancient philosophy such as Hegel and Nietzsche who interpreted Heraclitus in different ways from the point of view of their own philosophy. These texts will be made available on Ufora in pdf, so free of charge.
