Position of the course

Methodological introduction to the use of images as a historical source.

Contents

Introduction to iconographical theories and models, within the context of the discipline of history.

Summarized overview of the history of visual media.

Analysis of multiple types of images as historical sources. A minimum of 3 of the following types of images will be dealt with:

- Drawings
- Paintings
- Prints
- Heraldic sources
- Photographs
- Moving images (non-fiction)
- Cartoons in mass media

The classes on the premodern period focus on the visual culture of the Low Countries, including religious painting, genre painting, family portraits and political prints. For the modern and contemporary period the focus lies on photography in contexts of war, family portraits and colonialism.

examination during the second examination period is possible

Extra information on the examination methods

The periodical evaluation is based on the reader, information provided during the lectures and on PP's available on Ufora.

The permanent evaluation consists of an individual assignment in which historical images are sought for an article in a history journal, a research project or a public history project. With the found material, students conceive a small scale virtual exhibition with the digital collection and publication platform Omeka S. Every image is provided with metadata, a description of its content and historical context. The student also justifies his research strategy and choice of images.

Calculation of the examination mark

50% periodical evaluation – 50% permanent evaluation

You do not have to be awarded 10/20 on both parts to succeed. However, those who do not pass must redo all parts for which no 10/20 was achieved.
