Position of the course

This advanced course builds on Russian I; it enables students to acquire a further insight in the basics of Russian: pronunciation, basic grammar and an active knowledge of vocabulary. Moreover, students are further introduced into the practice(s) of academic research and learn to apply various scholarly skills.

Contents

The course "Russian II" consists of 3 parts: grammar, language practice and methodology
Grammar covers the following items: the declension of nouns, adjectives and pronouns in the plural; verbs of movement; the short form and the comparative degree of the adjective; pronouns (expansion); conjugations, tenses, aspects and modes of the verb (repetition and expansion); the basic use of nouns and adjectives in conjunction with numerals, the basic use of verbs of movement, adjectives, pronouns; systematisation of fonological rules.
 The study unit "Russian Language Practice" consists of two sub-units: Writing skills and Speaking skills:
 In "Writing skills" the students' vocabulary is significantly expanded on the basis of vocabulary themes. Certain aspects of grammar are practised through written exercises. Attention is also paid to text analysis, elementary translation of Russian into Dutch and text production skills.
"Speaking skills" is closely tied to "Writing skills", using the same vocabulary themes.

Students acquire the new vocabulary and grammar introduced in "Writing skills" through oral practice, translating dialogues from Dutch into Russian and summarizing texts. Emphasis is placed on the correct use of verb tenses, verb aspect and numerals and students are taught to tell the time and give dates.

The Methodology classes learn students to implement the research skills addressed in Russian I on the basis of a guided, overarching assignment.
