Keywords

"Historiography of the arts" provides an introduction to the historical development of art history, musicology and theater studies and their methodologies and paradigms.

Position of the course

Historiography of the art sciences offers the student insight into the main theoretical debates, polemics and concepts of the field.

- The course makes connections between the evolution of the art sciences, musicology and theater sciences on the one hand, and social and humanistic disciplines on the other.
- The course highlights the similarities, differences and interactions between the various art forms and their scientific disciplines.
- The course instructs the student in the value and importance of meta-reflection and methodological insight in the study of art.
- This course points out the importance of meta-reflection and methodological insight into the various art historical disciplines.

The course makes a first connection between the content-oriented courses of the large art historical surveys of the first bachelor with the methodologically oriented courses of the second and third bachelors.

Contents

The following topics are discussed (the overview is not literally a lesson plan but an indication of the most important theories and debates).
