Teaching languages

English, Dutch

Keywords

African languages, African linguistics

Position of the course

This basic course wants to give students an introductory survey of the African linguistic landscape, regarding both classification and inventory of the languages and structural characteristics.

Contents

This course first identifies, in general terms, the languages and language families spoken on the African continent. For the native languages considerable attention is devoted to the genetic classifications. The linguistic characteristics of the African languages and African language families are subsequently expanded on, and this on phonological, morphological and syntactic levels.

Initial competences

No specific preliminary knowledge required

Final competences

- 1 To have good knowledge of the geographical place of both indigenous and non-indigenous languages of Africa and of the classification of African languages.
- 2 To know and be able to analyze the most important phonological, morphological and syntactic characteristics of African languages.
