Keywords

African history, precolonial history, colonial history, postcolonial history, African politics, African culture.

Position of the course

This course provides students with an understanding of the main themes and directions in the history of Africa as currently understood, and introduces them to both the longer-term development and current debates in the study of African history. The course combines broad overview and case studies so as to make students sensitive to the diversity and variation within and among African societies.

Contents

The course will cover pre-colonial political formations in Africa, both states/empires and stateless societies, and the reasons for the relative rarity of the former in Africa. It will also consider the legacies of the slave trade. It examines the political dynamics of conquest, resistance and accommodation, and the economic, political, cultural and religious ramifications of colonisation. In the post-colonial period, it examines political violence and war, poverty and famine, dictatorship and democracy and the general crises of African states, as well as popular culture and social and religious movements.

Initial competences

As per requirements for inscription into the BA programmes of which the course forms part.

Final competences

- 1 To understand the main historical developments in Africa, including political, economic and cultural structures, institutions and interactions.
- 2 To be capable of reflecting critically on the African past.
- 3 To be able to apply the knowledge of the past to gain insight into contemporary African societies.
- 4 To be able to deal creatively and critically with different viewpoints and interpretations in the historiography of Africa.
- 5 To gain an appreciation of the diversity within and between African cultures and societies.
- 6 To begin to be able to read academic literature independently and critically; to be able to follow the structure of arguments, assess them and make connection between different ones.
