Keywords

Classical Japanese (bungo), Japanese language, Japanese literature

Position of the course

This course is the fourth of four subsequent courses (Bungo II, III, IV, and V) that form an integral whole and introduce you in 16 exercises in total into the most significant grammatical phenomena and structures that distinguish bungo (so-called “classical Japanese”) from the spoken language (so-called “modern Japanese”; on the distinction of the two, please, consult the section "Position of the course" for the course "Bungo I").
In the course Bungo V you will learn to deal with seven additional auxiliary verbal suffixes and therewith complete the training that will allow you to survive your first independent bungo mission (more about that in the description of the subsequent course, Bungo VI).
By means of our usual extensive practical exercises you will learn to analyze and understand bungo texts and text fragments from ancient times to the modern period on a high level of grammatical complexity. On this advanced level too, you will become acquaint with literary gems and oddities, thereby deepening your historical and cultural knowledge of Japan.

Contents

In the four exercises of the course Bungo V (exercises 13-16) you will get used to the related jodōshi of positive and negative conjecture – among other things – "mashi" and "ji" (exercise 13). You will learn how passive voice, medium and potentialis are expressed by the jodōshi “ru” and “raru”, and the factitive and causative are formed by the *jodōsh*i “shimu” (exercise 14). You will become acquaint with the jodōshi of past conjecture, “ramu” and “kemu” (exercise 15), and eventually learn to handle the jodōshi “maji”, expressing negative conjecture with a different spin and other nuances (exercise 16).
As in the previous courses, a plethora of additional minor issues will be brought to your attention in our extensive practical exercises, allowing you to complete your grammatical and linguistic expertise and further polish your status as an exquisite emerging connoisseur of Japanese past and present history and culture.
Our exercise texts consist mainly of longer passages from classical and modern prose texts on an advanced level of grammatical complexity, ranging from the ancient Ise monogatari to entries in the poet, Masaoka Shiki’s diary, or from a text by Emperor Meiji to the feminist writer, Fukuda Hideko's memoirs.
