Position of the course

This course discusses a fundamental aspect of Latin literature: gender and sexuality. We shall observe how these concepts are configured in a vast array of Latin texts.

Contents

Forbidden loves.Gender, sexuality, and perversion in Roman literature

The literature of ancient Rome has often been approached as a repertory of extravagant love stories. Post-classical, Christian, or modern readers have seen and been confronted with diverse, sometimes alienating and often unusual forms of love. Such love disturbs the norm and is then called "perverse." But such love, which is "forbidden" or "unthinkable" according to our morality, was perceived differently in the past.

Within this course we will read and discuss a number of texts, from a variety of literary genres and periods. The two major protagonists are Ovid (in particular the Metamorphoses) and Seneca (the tragedies), but we will also examine rhetoric, historiography, epigrams, epyllia and hagiography. Thus, we cover the time from the Republic to Christian late antiquity.

Using this rich and diverse selection of texts and authors, we will analyze the variety of gender categories that govern discourses around sexuality in Rome.

Initial competences

Students have successfully completed Ancient Literature and Latin Tradition in Europe or obtained a demonstrable knowledge of the envisaged competencies.

Final competences

- 1 to understand how to read Latin literature
- 2 to translate and discuss the selected texts in terms of style and literary analysis.
- 3 to acknowledge the texts in their individuality.
- 4 to acknowledge the role of sexuality and gender construction in different texts and genres.
- 5 to be able to critically adapt the acquired knowledges.
- 6 to discuss the selected texts in broad cultural terms.
- 7 to get acquainted with the most important methodologies in Latin literary studies.
- 8 to understand the difference between a research question and a methodology.
- 9 to read the scholarly discussions through the direct knowledge of the original Latin text.
- 10 to be able to produce a basic research question.
- 11 to acquire familiarity with basic approaches and theoretical model to be developed critically.

Extra information on the examination methods

Assessment moment

Periodical and non-periodical

Assessment

Oral exam: open book exam (including written preparation) with 3 questions (situating, paraphrasing, literary analysis)

Written exam: five knowledge and application questions about metrics, stylistics, textual transmission, and the Latin text

Permanent evaluation of the discussion contributions on Ufora and the presentation of the smallgroup in the final class.

If student fail the non-periodical evaluation, a second chance is offered through a compensatory activity between the first and second examination period.

The examination is in line with the envisaged competencies of the course.

Calculation of the examination mark

Periodical: written 60%

Non-periodical: 40 %.

If students have 10/20 for one of the course units, they cannot pass the course. In this case, the mark will be reduced to the highest unsuccessful grade if the final score would still be ten or more out of twenty. If students demonstrate insufficient command of Latin during the written examination, they will also fail the course. They may take a reexamination in which only the knowledge of Latin is tested.

Facilities for Working Students

It is possible to agree with the instructor upon an alternative study programme if the student cannot actively follow the class.
