Keywords

Comparative Literature, Cultural Studies, Philosophy of Literature, Interartistic comparatism

Position of the course

This course situates literary phenomena within a general culture-theoretical, -philosophical and historical context. The emphasis is not so much on the study of a culture's or nation's inherent literary traditions, but on an understanding of literary phenomena at large (as is customary in comparative literature).

Contents

This course aims to shed light on what makes modern literature a specific form of knowledge and experience. It consists of sections dealing with in part overlapping issues in comparative literature, in particular the ties between literature and other domains of knowledge (psychology, psychoanalysis, neurosciences, philosophy).

Initial competences

The student is conversant with the fundamental issues in literary theory and comparative literature, as well as with the concrete analysis of literary texts and the historical function of literary traditions, based on his or her knowledge of one or two national literatures.

Final competences

- 1 The student acquires advanced expertise in comparative literature.
- 2 The student is able to deal more critically with publications in the mentioned fields.
- 3 The student is able to analyse independently inter-artistic works, as well as the relationship between literary texts and other media.
- 4 S/he is better acquainted with the epistemological specificity of literature and is able to relate literature and its study to other academic disciplines such as psychology and philosophy.
- 5 The student gains a better understanding of the complexity and cultural historical role of modern literature, which ideally leads to a richer reading of literary texts.
- 6 The student betters her/his ability to communicate complex literary theoretical issues.
- 7 The student gets insight in the functioning of stories in a social context, in the narrative formats of intersubjective communication and in the social-psychological impact of stories
