Position of the course

This course introduces advanced students to historical and theoretical tools for analyzing and contextualizing different kinds of comics (strips, periodicals, comic books, graphic novels), with a special focus on graphic novels and comics magazines.

Contents

The graphic novel has become a staple of the literary scene. It also continues to mystify: is it a work of literature, of visual art? Is it a novel or an art book? What is the difference between comics and graphic novels? Understanding comics as a medium - thus, seeing graphic novels, albums, comic strips as different manifestations of the medium - this course seeks to examine comics in all their diversity.

The course hence

- interrogates the polarities of popular/genre fiction and literary fiction
- investigates the differences between literary and cultural products for children and adults and the grey areas where they overlap
- reflects on the relation between materiality and mediality, what it implied in the evolution of comics formats, and what has changed after the digital turn
- examines the politics of representation of the medium, considering its historical unfolding and medium-specific characteristics
- equips students with historical and theoretical tools for analyzing visual and thematic features in different kinds of comics (strips, periodicals, graphic novels)
- comprises a creative research project developed by the students

Initial competences

Proof of conducting small research projects and writing research papers: ability to formulate research questions and hypotheses, select and apply appropriate methodologies, distill and evaluate results.

Final competences

1 Acquire insight into comics histories and methodologies from comics studies, visual semiotics and periodical studies that allow to navigate visual culture and critically read different kinds of comics (graphic novels, comics magazines, comic books)

- 2 Be able to position and apply the methodological tools coming from their literary/linguistics background in analyzing visual culture, combining formal (visual semiotics and narratology) and ideological perspectives (critical theory/cultural studies and the like)
- 3 Incorporate and give feedback on presentations and group work.
- 4 Be able to design and conduct a comics-related research project by selecting, combining and applying relevant methodologies for the study of comics and collectively crafting a graphic essay/fanzine
- 5 Effectively communicate results through different academic formats.

Extra information on the examination methods

The assessment for attending students will take into account attendance and participation in class.

In addition, each week, one or two students will be asked to introduce the work on which the lesson will focus and answer any preliminary questions from their classmates.

One lesson will be dedicated to explaining and providing assistance with the collective graphic essays/fanzines. Students will have formed groups in advance and decided on a topic to focus on.

The written exam will take place in January, and consist of open questions and multiple-choice questions.

Non-attending students take the written exam and an oral exam, consisting of a short presentation followed by a Q&A.

Calculation of the examination mark

Attending students:

- 1 Participation: 20% (attendance 5%, participation in class 5%, individual presentation of the weekly reading 10%)
- 2 Collective graphic essay/fanzine: 30%
- 3 Written exam: 50%

Non-attending students:

- 1 Oral exam: 50% (short presentation 20%, Q&A 30%)
- 2 Written exam: 50%
