Position of the course

This in-depth course is part of a course package of 'Domain-specific knowledge subjects', which is intended as a deepening of the knowledge acquired in the first year. In this case, it involves gaining insight into the archaeology of the Phoenician and Punic world.

Contents

Functional and chronologically constructed overview of the archaeology of the Phoenician and Punic world and critical discussion of a series of capita selecta (funerary, architectural-historical, maritime, gender and landscape archaeology), placed within the whole of the ancient Mediterranean world and West Asia.

Initial competences

Having successfully completed the course units 'Introduction to Greek and Roman Archaeology and Art' (or the old course 'Archaeology of Classical Antiquity'), 'Archaeology of the Ancient Near East', and 'Academic Skills I', or have acquired the competences envisaged therein in another way.

Have standard language skills (Dutch, English, French and German).

Final competences

- 1 Familiarity with basic features of Phoenician and Punic archaeology
- 2 Understanding the position of Phoenician and Punic culture within the whole of the Bronze and Iron Age cultures of the Mediterranean region and western Asia
- 3 Be able to recognise and handle the chronological working tools of Phoenician and Punic archaeology.
- 4 Show understanding of the main theories that are and were prevalent in Phoenician and Punic archaeology.
- 5 Be able to think critically about current research problems within Phoenician and Punic archaeology.
