Keywords

Dutch in the Low Countries; language variation and change; language norms; language attitudes; language policy; pluricentrism; (de)standardisation; demotisation; orthography

Position of the course

This course aims to provide students with an understanding of the complexity of the current language situation in Flanders (and to a lesser extent, also the Netherlands, Suriname, and the Caribbean region). To achieve this, it delves into the historical background, specifically the historical development of Dutch (with a specific focus on external history), and the socio-geographic structure of the language area (with attention to language variation, language attitudes, and language norms). Additionally, this course aims to refresh verb spelling.

Contents

To comprehend the complex language situation in the Low Countries and to make an informed choice as a future professional language user, this course provides a thorough overview of the historical development of Dutch, with specific attention to its standardization history. Additionally, it focuses on the contemporary situation of Dutch in the Low Countries, including attention to the relationship between Belgian Dutch and Netherlandic Dutch, the relationship between standard language and informal varieties of Dutch (such as 'tussentaal', chat language, youth language), and the relationship between language behavior, language attitudes, and language norms. As a practical application of the above, this course also offers students an overview of the main normative sources of Dutch and online exercises on verb spelling.

Initial competences

To have a very good command of Dutch in terms of reading, listening, writing, and speaking skills (at native or near-native level).

To have a language-aware and language-critical attitude.

Final competences

- 1 Having elementary knowledge of and insight into the genesis and development of the Dutch standard language (external language history).
- 2 Having elementary knowledge of the main characteristics of national, regional and social varieties of Dutch.
- 3 Being able to position Dutch structurally within the West Germanic languages.

- 4 Having elementary knowledge of and insight into language attitudes and (the emergence of) language norms.

5 To be able to place the current Flemish language situation within a broader European context.

Conditions for credit contract

Access to this course unit via a credit contract is unrestricted: the student takes into consideration the conditions mentioned in 'Starting Competences'

Conditions for exam contract

Teaching methods

Lecture, Independent work

Extra information on the teaching methods

Lecture: Lectures alternate between traditional lectures (the lecturer presents a chapter from the textbook) and response lectures (students prepare a chapter, solve some questions about it, and the lecturer discusses the questions and answers during the class). Recordings of each lecture are available, for all students, until the end of the second examination period. These recordings are an extra service and not a replacement for the lessons. Active presence remains essential for a good understanding of the subject matter. In the event of a decrease in attendance, the open availability of recordings will be reviewed. Technical issues can cause a recording to be missing.
Independent work: Independently prepare for the lectures and practice the course contents, including (online) spelling exercises.
