Position of the course

This course introduces students to the analysis of textual composition and style in Latin literature. It builds on the content of the courses Latin: Language Proficiency I and Latin: Language Proficiency II, as well as Latin Tradition in Europe.

Contents

The primary aim of the course is to make students able to read Latin texts effectively. The attitude we aim to develop differs from punctual analysis. At the end of the course students should be able to approach Latin texts the same way as they would do with other foreign language texts. Reading, however, also is a complex cultural process. We also pay attention to these aspects.

The texts on offer are part of the Latin tradition from between the 11th and the 17th centuries. We use basic insights taken from cultural anthropology, literary theory and cultural sociology. In this way we come to understand how our own cultural tradition not only gives form to 'the other' but also creates our own 'I', and makes it inaccessible at the same time.

After an introductory lecture, the course is built around two modules. One centering on our relation to the other through biography, and one focussing on autobiography. The central themes of the course are explored through our reading of stories (a legend, and a philosophical fable), autobiographical letters, and polemical meditations.

The students are introduced to reading strategies with regard to Latin texts in terms of structure, and internal coherence. In class, we read and analyse texts in three different genres, each characterised by its own compositional and stylistic norms. The students also independently read a modern literary essay, in which the central themes of the second module are explored. In a short, personal essay, written for a general audience, they explore some aspects of the ancient texts in dialogue with the contemporary one.

Thorough knowledge of the Latin grammar and syntax as acquired in the Ba1 (Latin Language Proficiency I & II) is taken for granted. Failures can lead to a negative result for the examination as a whole.

If the student has less than 10/20 for one of the four assessment forms, he is not considered to pass the examination as a whole. If the endscore would be 10 or more/20, it will be reduced to the highest of the failing notes.

(If a student does not pass the non-periodical evaluation, a second chance is offered by means of a compensatory activity between the first and second exam period.)
