Dutch

Keywords

Auxiliary historical sciences (chronology, diplomatics, palaeography [thematic], sigillography, metrology, financial and monetary systems), source criticism, administrative and bureaucratic writing practices in secular, ecclesiastical, and monastic contexts, pragmatic literacy, Middle Ages, Early Modern Period.

Position of the course

This course offers an in-depth overview of the principal auxiliary historical sciences relevant to the study of the medieval and early modern periods.

Through theoretical explanations and practical exercises, students will become familiar with these methods and learn to apply them —particularly in terms of authenticity criticism— to typologically diverse edited and unedited sources (primarily archival material) from the Ancien Régime.

Contents

The course consists of thematic lectures and practical seminars structured around several interrelated modules with substantive cross-fertilization: chronology (calendrical systems), documentary writing practices and pragmatic literacy, palaeography and diplomatics (the study of charters), archival history, sigillography (the study of seals), financial and monetary systems, and metrology.

Initial competences

Knowledge of Latin can be useful but is not compulsory - alternative source texts in vernacular language will also be used.
