Teaching languages

English

Keywords

Medieval Greek language, Byzantine literature

Position of the course

This course provides an overview of the language forms (learned and popular) and the literature of Medieval Greek. It offers insight in how Medieval Greek language and literature relates to ancient Greek and modern Greek language and literature. The Byzantine phase of Greek is important to the study of both ancient and modern Greek, and is also instrumental for a comparative study of medieval European linguistics and literature.

Contents

This courses offers an overview of the most important literary genres and linguistic developments in Greek from the 4th to 15th century. After an introductory session, chronologically ordered sessions each discuss one particular period, while some sessions discuss specific genres in a broader diachronical context.

The emphasis of the course is on:

- the complex relationships between Byzantine texts and the ancient cultural and intellectual heritage;
- the embedment of texts in a specifically medieval historical, cultural, and/or religious context (propaganda, criticism, social tensions, education, rituals, etc.)
- the specific nature of textual production and consumption in the Middle Ages (book culture, authorship, fluid texts, etc.)

Initial competences

Good knowledge of classical and/or Modern Greek.

Final competences

- 1 To know the most important authors, subjects, and literary forms of Medieval Greek literature
- 2 To know the evolution of the Greek language from Late Antiquity to the Early Modern period
- 3 To understand the specific nature of medieval textual culture (transmission, authorship, orality) and to demonstrate this on the basis of primary texts
- 4 To clarify the linguistic and literary features of Medieval Greek texts in relation to the broader developments of Greek language and literature (from Antiquity to now)
- 5 To understand and critically assess the complex relations between Byzantine language and literature and the cultural and intellectual heritage of Antiquity
- 6 To understand and critically assess the historical, cultural, intellectual and religious context and agency of Medieval Greek texts
- 7 To formulate a research question about Byzantine texts, to clarify the scientific debate about it in a concise and clear manner, and to adopt a critical standpoint based on the analysis of primary texts
- 8 Participate in an academic-level debate about questions related to medieval Greek literature
