Position of the course

This study unit covers two specific audiovisual techniques that enhance accessibility for people with a foreign language background, or who are sensorially or cognitively impaired: live subtitling and audio description with audio subtitling when relevant.

Students are trained in both the technological and the linguistic aspects of these techniques and develop a set of skills and competences closely related to interpreting, such as summarising, rephrasing, restructuring, adapting, shortening rapidly, accurately and only rendering relevant information.

Only for students with a Bachelor degree in Applied Linguistics.

Contents

The unit consists of two sub-units:

Live-subtitling deals with an intralingual translation technique that enhances accessibility for people with a foreign language background, or auditive and cognitive impairments. The study unit first addresses different aspects of live intralingual subtitling. Students are made familiar with the possibilities and shortcomings of the live subtitling technique and are trained in using specific speech recognition and subtitling software (Dragon).

Audio description deals with a mode of intersemiotic translation that enables visually or cognitively impaired people to fully enjoy images or image-supported information offered by audiovisual documents. The students learn how to describe the visual content and how to make specific interlingual subtitles for visually impaired people (audio subtitling). The sub-unit starts with a theoretical and practical introduction to audio description and audio subtitling (best practices). Students are made familiar with the possibilities, limitations and challenges of adding audio description to an audiovisual document and learn how to work with specific software (Reaper).

Initial competences

The student:

- has acquired the general competences that may be expected from an academic bachelor;
- has an advanced knowledge of Dutch;
- has excellent speaking and listening skills;
- is able to work fast;
- is familiar with basic software.

Final competences

- 1 Having advanced knowledge of the scientific study of live subtitling and audio description as a process and as a product, i.e. specific forms of intersemiotic interpreting [M.T. 1.3.; no assessment]
- 2 Actively following new developments both within the discipline of live subtitling and audio description [M.T. 3.1. ; no assessment].
- 3 Judging and acting with the necessary dose of critical self-reflection in complex contexts [M. T. 3.3. ; no assessment].
- 4 As a live subtitler or audio describer, functioning effectively in a team; analysing and justifying their solutions and choices; checking, reviewing their own work and that of others [M.T. 4.1. no assessment]
- 5 Producing accurate intersemiotic work in Dutch, using adequate techniques, especially vocal techniques [M.T. 6.1; assessed].
- 6 Applying relevant problem-solving strategies (preparation for an assignment, monitoring during the process) so as to enhance their effectiveness; planning and managing time, stress and work load; complyin with deadlines [M.T. 6.5.; assessed].
- 7 During the process making use of the traditional and electronic resources as well as technological tools [M.T. 6.6. ; assessed].
