Position of the course

The course Introduction to Cultural Analysis aims to provide students with a theoretical and analytical insight into culture as a phenomenon that shapes and directs individual and social behavior and cultural production in numerous ways. The course introduces students to the main movements, thinkers and concepts within culture theory and cultural studies, and pays special attention to the activation and implementation of those concepts in concrete analyses and interpretations. Students learn how to recognize and analyze structures, signs and messages in diverse, multilingual, cultural objects, and how to think critically and with nuance about, and participate in, culture, society and communication. Introduction to Culture Analysis introduces students to academic thinking about culture, and challenges them to think critically about culture themselves. Within the programme, this subject prepares for subjects such as History and Culture, Culture and Society, literary subjects, and Dutch in inter- and cross-cultural perspective. Moreover, the concepts and attitudes of abstract thinking, interpretation and reading skills contribute to research-focused classes and assignments.

Contents

The course consists of two parts. A first, introductory section provides students with a crucial basic critical orientation, providing key basic concepts and terms that form the building blocks of cultural theory. Its main focus is how we can define, recognize and analyze culture and cultural objects. The more extensive second part consists of a series of lectures, each time focused on a cluster of concrete themes. Its focus is mainly on themes with particular social and current relevance, such as ideology, identity, gender, media, etc. Each of these thematic lectures provides an introduction to the most important insights and ideas about the chosen theme, introduces important thinkers, and discusses concrete cases. The cases and thinkers reflect the different language areas of the department, and appeal to a wide range of cultural objects (text, image, practice). Particular attention is paid to Barthes, Foucault, Derrida, Marx, Benjamin, Said, Butler, Adorno, etc.
