Keywords

public international law, international relations, peaceful settlement of disputes between States, United Nations, International Court of Justice, arbitration, written and oral argument and decision-making

Position of the course

The aim of this course is to offer the students insight into the way international law works in practice. To this end students will analyse a concrete and ongoing international legal procedure (normally an inter-State dispute), with a view to identifying the applicable rules of international law and applying them to the case at hand. The course also aims at providing insight in written and oral argument and decision-making in dispute settlement.

Contents

The course consists of a limited number of ex cathedra lectures (including possible guest lectures) in which students are introduced to the peaceful settlement of disputes in international law. These introductory lectures also serve to explain to students the aim and object of the module and to prepare students for the second part of the course, where they are divided into groups and are asked to examine a concrete and ongoing international legal dispute (e.g. a case pending before the International Court of Justice or a pending arbitral case). Students will either act as 'counsel' for a party to the dispute concerned, or as judge/arbitrator. Students acting as counsel will prepare a written memorial dealing with the merits of the case and/or, where appropriate, the admissibility thereof, and will present their arguments in a pleading session. Students acting as judges/arbiters will bring a presentation on the case concerned and will prepare a written judgment/award after the oral pleadings. The pleading sessions are followed by group discussions.

Initial competences

- To have a basic knowledge of international law (such as basic knowledge on sources of international law, treaty law, subjects of international law, international responsibility, settlement of disputes).

- To be capable to engage in independent research of legal and other sources.
- To possess good English oral and writing skills.

Final competences

- 1 Having insight into the way public international law and international dispute settlement operate
- 2 Becoming familiar with fundamental questions of admissibility and jurisdiction in the context of judicial dispute settlement
- 3 Using primary and secondary sources of international law and applying them to specific cases
- 4 Knowing different case studies pertaining to topical questions of public international law
- 5 The capacity to write a structured paper on an international legal dispute
- 6 Bringing oral legal argument
- 7 Having attention for topical questions of international law.

Extra information on the teaching methods

- Lectures: the (diplomatic and esp. judicial) means of dispute settlement in international law are explained during the introductory classes and possible guest lectures
- Tutorials: guided exercises: students are divided in groups and work on pending international legal procedures (e.g., inter-State procedures pending before the International Court of Justice). Students acting as counsel prepare written memorials as well as oral pleadings. Students acting as judge provide an introductory presentation of the case concerned and write a judgment after the pleadings. Pleadings are followed by group discussions. This may involve a responsible use of AI.
- Microteaching: students prepare a case (written document) as counsel or judge and present this in class.
