Position of the course

Migration is a multidimensional and complex phenomenon of all times, which in recent years is increasingly dominating societal and legal debates. Migration law regulates the movement of persons across national borders, as well as the legal status of migrants within the host country.

This course aims to provide students with a thorough understanding of national migration law, paying particular attention to the influence of European and international law, human rights implications, as well as practical relevance. In addition, it aims to enhance students' critical reflection about the role of migration law in society, among others through the discussion of topical issues in class.

Contents

This course examines the sources, structure and rules of Belgian migration law, with particular attention for the influence of European and international law. An introductory part deals with various key concepts within migration law, situates migration law both historically and societally, and discusses the institutional framework.

Thereinafter, the following themes are addressed:

- Nationality and statelessness
- Access to the territory (visa provisions and border controls)
- Residence rights, both in general and as regards categories of persons for whom particular rules apply (EU citizens; labour migrants; students; family reunification; international protection (refugee status and subsidiary protection status); humanitarian regularisation; medical regularisation etc.)

- Expulsion and security measures (detention)
- Remedies

Transversally, attention is paid to the rights of persons who find themselves in a vulnerable situation and to the protection of fundamental rights in general.
